The China Frank. HONGRONG, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1890.

THE position of England in Egypt was never stronger than it is at the present moment: In the negotiations between Erance and England with reference to their spheres of influence in Western Africa, it is said the question of Egypt was excluded, and no mention whatever is made of that country in the convention just signed. But the po sition of England in the Land of the Pha racha must have had some influence on the negotiations. France, to preserve lier face, as the Chinese would say, still refuses to openly acquiesce in our predominance, but, with her position in Madagaecar consolidated and a vest empire allotted to her in Western Africa, she will become less querolons and will likely allow the Egyptian question to gradually aink into the background. That in some way or other the Anglo-French convention has changed the aspect of things may, we think, be gathered from Lord Salisbury's recent speech at the Mansion House. Never before was he so outspoken on the subject. He said :- 'As to the future of Egypt, I need not say that it is a diplomatic subject of some delicacy. There are those who say that Egypt is so flourishing that it cannot possibly require our care any longer. They seem to me very like people who should find beautiful flowers in their garden, and should there-Noon .- Arratoon Apcar leaves for Straits fore say it was not necessary to keep the gardener any longer. If Egypt is growing in prosperity and security of every kind, if-Notice of Optional Cargo per Copack all the abuses which long generations of to be sent in before 10 a.m. misrule had fastened upon her are disapmisrulo had fastened upon her are disappearing one by one, let there be no mistake about it, it is to English energy, to English administration, to English traditions that this great result is due. The time may come will come, I hope when these great achievements may be perpetuated without the aid of the great race to whom they were originally due, but that time has not come yet. And we shall be compromising every chance of securing to posterity the great advantages which for the present we have produced, if we allow any considerations to induce us to withdraw our hand from the collent quality and good value for the money. duty which events have cast upon us, and which we have solemnly undertaken. When Egypt will be able to dispense with our care depends, no doubt, partly on events and circumstances over which we have no control, but it depends in some degree on the action of other nations, who have it in their power to hasten or to retard the Orders through Local Post or by Tele- development, which will mean the full maturity of the Egyptian people." With perhaps the exception of the reference Case: Per Bot. to the action of other nations, Lord Salisbury's remarks might be applied with equal force to our position in India. There is 10 scarcely an English statesman who would not admit that when the people of India have reached their 'full maturity,' our work in that great country will have been accomplished, or who would care to deny that we. might safely retire when the great achievements made in India can be perpetuated without the nid of the race to whom they were originally due. But the time has not come for the 'gardener' to withdraw from. 1.00 the garden of India, and will not likely arrive for many generations to come; and he would be a bold man who would declare that Egypt is in a more advanced state than 1.10 India-any nearer full maturity. Translated into unofficial or non-diplomatic language, Lord Salisbury's declaration prac-

Among the most hopelessly irredeemable

people in the world are those who refuse to learn by their own mistakes. We are all 7.50 fallible mortals and the best of us occasionally form wrong opinions and do wrong actions. The wise man, when he sees he is wrong, admits his mistakes and endeavours . $12 $1.10 to rectify them; the fool persists in his folly. Captain Ashton, the other day, when speaking about Sunday labour, referred to the Stamp Ordinance as an illustration of how a community, holding at the outset opinions atrongly antagonistic to a certain policy, had in the progress of events come to recognise their mistake and to support what they previously denounced. The speaker, however, was somewhat too sweeping in his generalisation. There still. remains at least one unconverted. The Daily Press refuses to admit the mistake it - 8 0.75 | made in shricking with the rest of the European community against the Stamp Ordinance. Our contemporary is forced to admit that 'it would perhaps not be easy to find one (a source of revenue) that would 1.10 yield the same amount with so little trouble. In other words it says- We were wrong, 0.75 but we are too self-conceited to admit the mistake.' For is not one of the greatest recommendations of any tax, that it should 12 1.10 yield a large amount with little trouble. All taxes are intrinsically bad. They are of the devil devilish—the penalty we have to pay for our own or our neighbour's wickedness, If nations did not quarrel, if each man loved his neighbour as him-Capsulo 4.50 O.40 | self, there would be no need of armies, gaol, police or even of governments; said taxation would cease. But until 12 1.00 that happy time comes—if it ever will come -we must submit to be taxed. The only question therefore that has meantime to be Heering's Cherry Cordial considered is what sert of taxes will be least oppressive Evilently a tax that is difficult to collect is not only intrinsically but relatively bad. To spend $50,000 in collecting $500,000, is to add 10 por cent. to the evils caused by the tax. In the next place we have to consider the effect of a tax on trade. Now, it must not be forgotten that all taxes are prejudicial to trade. The money that, is paid for soldiers and polico is taken away from trade. Were it not given for those purposes there would be so much the more to carry on the world's commerce. The reare undoubtedly certain kinds of taxes that are more prejudicial than others, but it is by no means true that a tax which affects commerce directly is always worse thana tax that affects it indirectly. The indirect influence may be greater than the dir ct. Let us suppose that the direct stamp tax were abol shed and the goneral house rate correspondingly increased. Who is prepared to any that trade would in any way benefit ly the change? To the merchant it matters little whether he pays the money direct to the tax collector or in the purchase of stamps. In the former case, it may seem that the tax is spread that over a wider area, but it does not follow that its effect on the total trade of the Co-

It appears to me to be a case he will be best remembered by those who that has been properly worked up, and whatover ovidence there was has been produced. . In the decision I gave the other day I stated that before a house could be held to be a public gambling house there must be evidence to show that public gambling had taken place, not merely inferentially from the presence of the people there, but evidence of actual Mr Wodehouse had another gambling gambling by strangers, before a conviction club case to deal with, in the P lice Court could be obtained. It is still with a deal of hesitation and that I deal with the present case As usual there were found in this house club rules, handsome furniture, account books deal ng with nothing but ordinary expenses such as provisions and girls and so forth; and there is a disavowal of responsibility on the part of every witness who is called. One witness says one man keeps the books and another says another dues it and these two say it is somebody There is a shifting and uncertain tone about the whole of the evidence for the defence which in the matter of credi bility makes it of very pour account indeed. Also when one comes to see what took place on the night of the 10th September one sees that these printed rules, which are vaunted so much, appear to be so many bogeys to frighten the police and perfectly worthless as far as any practical effect is concerned. On this night, if the evidence is to be believed, no less than ten visitors not connected with the club-of which there are only twenty two shareholders and no other members-made their way into this place without the slightest restraint and gambled or not as they chose. am aware that there are discrepaucies in certain details which may in the eyes of some vitiate the whole testimony of some of the witness s for the prosecution, but these discrepancies are infinitely less than those found in the evidence for the defence. According to my view of the case, which I admit is very possibly wrong, I think this place was being kept on that night for the purpose of public gaming. As to the prisoners themselves, each of whom was taking a prominent part in the management the two games which were going on in the place, who were not them. selves gambling, who are shareholders in the place which was supported by the commission on the gambling carried on, I find that they were guilty of permitting persons to play within this public gaming house. and I sentence each of them to six months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Since it is impossible to assert that anything contained in an English Act of Parliament is ultra vires, the old state of the law could only be declared to remain unal tered by placing an interpretation upon the clause in the Judicature Act other than that primd facie suggested by the words Was this possible? Must assuredly was not impossible, since Acts of Parliamen have often been decided to have a meaning very different from that appearing on the aurface. The Courts giving such de tision have, however, always first satisfie them selves that by their interpretation they were giving effect to the true intention of the Legislature. If other parts of the Act o. general considerations show clearly tha Parliament did not mean to's y what the seem to say, the Judges not only have right, but are bound to apply the spirit rather than the mere letter of the particula clause. Not the words, but the meaning sought to be conveyed, constitutes the lawhich the Courts administer. This pris ciple of construction is neither new nor a doubtful acceptance, and it has bee specifically laid down by high authority i a passage quoted by the Lord Chancellor - The sages of the law heretofore hav construed statutes quite contrary, to the letter in some appearance, and thes statutes which comprehend all things in th letter they have expounded to extend but to some things, and those which generally probibit all people from doing such an act. they have interpreted to permit some judged to reach to a une persons only, which expositions have always been founded on the intent of the Legislature, which they have collected sometimes by considering the cruse and accessity of making the Act sometimes by comparing one part of the Act with another, and sometimes by foreign circumstances. So that they have ever been guided by thointent of the Legislature, which they have always taken according to the recessity of the matter, and according to that which is consonant to reason and good discretion.' That is, a case may be at him the words and yet without the meaning of an Act, or cice versa, without the words but within the meaning No doubt this can in

the rule that it must never be assumed that the meaning of the Legislature was other than that prima focie meaning conveyed by the words, unless some manifest difficulty arises in applying those words. The Courts, since they have nothing to do with the policy or wisdom of Acts of Parliament, only consider the latent intention of a statute when they are compelled to do so by a doubt as to how that statute is to be applied. Was it, then, intended by the Legislature that decisions on a writ of habeas corpus should be subject to appeal The determination of this point depends upon the validity of a comparatively simple contention. Lord Bramwell's judgment put this contention with great force and perapionity. It is clear that Parliament did not intend to create an appeal, because if it had, some particular provisions as to the procedure to be observed would have been inserted in the Act. 'I say.' he declar d. that the absence of specific procedure in the Judicature Act to enforce an order reversing an order of disoharge on a writ of habeas corpus, and the possible futility of such reversal, is a strong argu. Amoy 29.86 80 62 x 2 b ment to show that an appeal do a not lie.'. Swatow ... 29.89 81 The sting of this argument lies in the fac. that when a man is discharged under the Vict. Peak - - writ of habens corpus, he is released uncon. Ounton ... 29.88 83 87 82 1 0 ditionally, and may at once go where he Macao pleases. If the discharge is reversed, no machinery exists for recupturing him, and the decision of the Court of Appeal bec mes, therefore, brutum fulmen. Parliement, if it had meant to grant the appeal, would certainly have given the Court of Appeal power to enforce its decision. The umission to do so is conclusive that its intention was other than that appearing prime ficie from the words: Of course, as Lord Bramwell says, 'if the statute in express terms said the appeal should lie, it must be cheyed. But when the questi a is one of constructi n, anrely it is a good argument to show that a particular cous ruction would be futile. But if the result of taking the words of k a statute simply at they stand h would be futile or lead to an aban dity, the right way of dealing with those words | bum dity of his supreted with more way is to put a limit on them.
